inch. Mollweide's Equal Area Projection. W. & A. K. Johnston, Ltd., Edinburgh and London, 1909. [These are school wall maps. Six shades of blue are used for sea depths, the deepest tint showing depths of over 24,000 feet. A brown tint indicates land below sea level and a shade of green and three of ochre show elevations above the sea, the deepest tint relating to land above 6,000 feet in height. The relations between land heights and sea depths are well shown by the colour scheme. All details may be plainly seen from the rear of a large class room. The maps have a high standard of accuracy and are well adapted for class instruction as to the broad features of the conformation of the sea floor and of the land forms. Some changes on the plates may well be made. Most of the more important volcanoes are indicated, but many of the extinct volcanoes, such as Kilimanjaro and Kenia in Africa, and Rainier in North America, are not differentiated from those that are active. The region of largest volcanic activity in Africa (Mufumbiro) is not shown as volcanic. The deep troughs, one in the Indian Ocean and the other just east of the northern Philippines, revealed by the German Planet expedition, are not indicated. The theory, based largely upon the discovery by Nansen of great depths in the Asian Arctic Ocean, has full expression on one of these maps and is confirmed by Peary's sounding taken within five miles of the pole.]
